TITLE : Ancient-imitated art and craft telephone with holding-free function

ABSTRACT : Disclosed is an ancient-imitated art and craft telephone with a holding-free function for allowing a user to use a single microphone realized by a call transmitter and a handle microphone while the user does not pick up the handset. Therefore, the problem of bad appearances caused by additionally installing a call transmitter on the top or side of a conventional holding-free telephone is solved. A switch capable of calling without picking up the handset, and an indicating lamp are provided on the center of the dial, thereby fully using functions of the dial. Hence, the present invention allows the user to call without picking up the handset, and maintains the beautiful appearance of the telephone to thus provide further values to the ancient-imitated art and craft telephone.
